

Cookery books have, during the past few years, been increasing not only in number but in price, and for the ordinary housewife a library of these valuable volumes (necessary if she is to give her family a varied and interesting diet), is often out of the question. Spring Books, however, announce a new series of "national" cook-books selling at the extraordinarily modest price of 5/- each, so that even the most limited budget should stretch to one or two at least. The first, Cooking the Spanish Way, edited by Elsa Behrens will be warmly welcomed by the increasing number of those whose holidays in Spain have given them a taste for the highly individual Spanish cuisine. Watch out for the others!
